CONTEST HEARING MONDAY

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

By Rodney Dutcher

WASHINGTON—A new group of hitherto concealed brain trusters has been pulled out of the bushes by the president himself, to compose the committee which will make a survey of the government for him, with a view to reorganization.

Nobody will ever know exactly how much influence Louis Brownlow, chairman, had on the New Deal. But members an proteges of the Brownlow group have come into government ranks in considerable numbers.

Just as Dr. Felix Frankfurter of Harvard was called on to recommend lawyers and Dr. Tugwell brought in numerous economists, Brownlow often has been asked to recommend men for the New Deal's administrative and executive jobs.

Aloof from political policies, he and his lieutenants have drafted administrative set-ups for various agencies.

The aid he has given and now is expected to give in the reorganization study is especially interesting because behind Brownlow are the Rockefellers and their millions.

Heads Great Organization

Brownlow is director of the Public Administration Clearing House of Chicago, which heads up 15 national associations of public officials and of others interested in the science of government—all heavily subsidized by Rockefeller money except the U. S. conference of mayors, which supports itself.

The purpose is to exchange information and experiences among cities and states and to improve the technique of government.

There's a loose tie-up with the University of Chicago, which is furnishing land for a building to house the affiliated groups. The secretaries of those groups and Brownlow are often referred to as "Brownie and his boys."

"Brownie" and various of "his boys" helped organize the administrative setups of FERA, AAA, CWA, WPA, PWA, and TVA, avoiding contact with political policies and staying in the background. Roosevelt called Brownlow in months ago to discuss government reorganization.

The Chicagoan is especially intimate with Secretary Ickes and Harry Hopkins. Once a newspaperman in Washington, he was appointed a District of Columbia commissioner by President Wilson and was city manager of Petersburg, Va., and Knoxville, Tenn., before he began his present work.

Has Two Noted Aides

The other two members of the reorganization committee are Brownlow's close associate, Charles E. Merriam—boss professor of political science at Chicago University and the man who makes the National Resources Board, with its national surveys and national plannings go 'round—and Luther H. Gulick, director of the Institute of Public Administration and a member of Brownlow's board.

Brownlow and most other members of his group have been offered important government jobs. Frank Bane, now executive officer of the Social Security Board and formerly director of the American Public Welfare Association, is the most conspicuous one to accept. Civil Service Commissioner Leonard D. White was a Brownlow-Merriam associate. Administrative Officer William A. F. Stephenson of PWA Housing Division is one of many New Deal appointees recommended by Brownlow.

Other Efforts Fizzled

Heretofore, however, these public administrators have been primarily important in state and city governments. Gulick, for instance, showed Senator Harry Byrd, when the latter was governor, how to reorganize the state government of Virginia.

Federal reorganization is something else again. The fact that the Brownlow-Merriam-Gulick trio is well equipped for the job and that its study will be something to point to in a campaign year doesn't mean that a thorough rejiggering of the federal set-up is anything more than a pious hope.

President William Howard Taft became excited over the idea 25 years ago and appointed a Commission on Economy and Efficiency. Harding appointed a Joint Committee on Reorganization of the Executive Departments which labored under Walter F. Brown from 1921 to 1924.

Herbert Hoover preached reorganization for years before he became president and let the word leak out that reorganization would be the big job of his first term. Late in 1931 he handed congress a plan for rejiggering about 50 agencies and commissions, mostly in the public health, conservation, education, and public works fields. Congress couldn't see the value of it.

In May, 1933, Roosevelt and Budget Director Lew Douglas were working on a plan which advance ballyhoo said would save $300,000,000. Actual results were so minor that no one remembers what they were.

Decision on Milk Under Sales Tax Expected Monday

Other Necessities Specifically Exempt—But Not Whole Milk

BUTTERFAT EXEMPT

State Argues Gasoline Exemption Wouldn't Apply to Crude Oil

By O. P. HANES
Associated Press Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—The State supreme court is scheduled to hand down Monday another decision in a sales tax test case which will determine whether sales of milk are exempt from the levy.

Chancellor Frank H. Dodge of Little Rock held several weeks ago that the tax did not apply to milk sales as the commodity is a food necessary to life. Revenue Commissioner Earl R. Wiseman appealed to the tribunal from the lower court decree.

The Hall sales tax act failed to list specifically milk as one of the foods necessary to life, but included flour, meat, lard, sugar, soda, baking powders, salt, meal, butter fats, eggs and all medicines necessary for the preservation of public health.

Pending an ophion from the supreme court, dairymen have been paying the sales tax into the registry of chancery court, the money to be refunded if the tribunal rules the commodity exempt.

J. A. Affolter and other Pulaski county dairymen instituted the test suit.

Wiseman's regulations for sales tax collections held that butter fats did not include milk or ice cream but did include cheese and butter.

Intent Is Disputed

The dairymen contend that it was the intention of the legislature to exempt whole milk, that there is no other food more necessary to life, and that the legislature not only intended to exempt milk but other dairy products derived from it.

They allege that butter fat is the principal food value contained in milk and that the price of milk is fixed according to the butter fat content and not the quality of milk.

They claim that more than two-thirds of the butter fats used as food by the people of Arkansas is consumed in butter, cheese, cream, ice cream and other dairy products.

"Among the articles of food exempted by section 15 of the act, whole milk is the only article that is absolutely necessary to life," their complaint says, "and without it as a food many people could not live."

Unreasonable, Says Dairymen

The dairymen contend that Wiseman's regulation that butter and cheese are exempt but that the tax applies on milk sales is contrary to the express provisions of the act, and discriminatory, arbitrary and unreasonable.

The braket system of tax collection which exempts sales under 13 cents is attacked, the milkmen charging that practically all of their sales are pints or quarts selling under 13 cents but that they are required to pay the levy

Road Organization Forms at Camden

"It's Political Question to Be Settled in August Primary"

CAMDEN, Ark.—Applauding statements of speakers that the question of whether south Arkansas is to get a fair share of future road construction funds is a "political question which must be settled at the August primary, regardless of what Governor Futrell may think or say about it," approximately 150 delegates from 33 cities and towns in the southern half of the state organized the South Arkansas Good Roads association here Friday.

They elected officers and directors and voted to hold a meeting in Little Rock within the next month to lay its program before the state Highway Commission.

J. W. Wilson of El Dorado was elected president of the newly formed organization; M. L. Sigmon of Monticello, vice president; George D. Holland, secretary of the Camden Chamber of Commerce, secretary, and George C. Merkel, manager of the Pine Bluff Chamber of Commerce, treasurer.

Directors were selected from 24 towns. All other South Arkansas towns were invited to name a representative to the Board of Directors. The board will elect from its members an executive committee of seven or nine members to represent the association in handling details.

C. E. Palmer of Texarkana, publisher of newspapers at Texarkana, Camden, El Dorado and Hot Springs presided.

Decision to ask the Highway Commission to grant the organization a hearing in Little Rock was reached after M. E. Melton, manager of the Texarkana Chamber of Commerce, presented an impressive array of maps, charts and tables compiled from highway reports and other sources tending to show that the southern half of the state has been discriminated against in the allotment of highway funds ever since the big construction program was opened in 1927.

Jersey Pardon Court Is Summoned

Governor Moves in Hauptmann's Case at 11th Hour

Wishes to Again Stop Execution, Scheduled for Tuesday Night

LEGALITY IN DOUBT

Authority for Second Reprieve Questioned—Wilentz Opposes It

TRENTON, N. J.—(Copyright Associated Press)—In the face of a statement by Attorney General David T. Wilentz that Bruno Richard Hauptmann "is as guilty today as the day he was convicted," Governor Hoffman Saturday called the Court of Pardons to convene Monday to consider a new clemency plea.

Looking ahead to a second denial of Hauptmann's appeal by the court, the governor sought the advice of legal authorities other than the attorney general.

The governor hoped to find some legal authority to issue a second stay of execution until his own investigation, active on several fronts, can be completed.

Wants to Act

TRENTON, N. J.—Gov. Harold G. Hoffman announced Friday that he would grant Bruno Richard Hauptmann another reprieve if legally possible.

He placed the reason for the decision as to his reprieve powers on the shoulders of the prosecutors. State's Attorney General David Wilentz will announce his opinion.

The governor's announcement, coupled with his assertion that the Hauptmann trial "reeks with unfairness, passion and prejudice," was made while the fate of Bruno's petition for a new hearing before the Court of Pardons remained in doubt. Three members of the court must give their consent if Hauptmann's latest clemency arguments are to be heard before he goes to the chair about 8 p. m. Tuesday for the murder of Charles A. Lindbergh Jr. But Friday night the signatures of only two of the eight mercy jurists had been obtained.

Special Offering at Baptist Church

$100 Needed to Pay for Materials on New Building

The third "Table Offering" for 1936 will be taken at the morning service of the First Baptist church to be used in paying for some materials installed in the Sunday school building.

The amount needed is $100, and since it is a small amount no letters have gone out from the church office to the membership.

The congregation is urged, however, to do the very best possible in order that we may go forward with some very necessary work during the next two weeks.

The pastor will preach at both the morning and evening services, and will be assisted in the evening by a choir of young people.

The congregational singing will be led by one of our high school boys, James Butler, and the piano will be played by another high school boy, J. T. Luck.

This is the first of a series of such services, and is open to all who are interested in young people and their work.

Alton's CCC Boys Begin Planting of Centennial Elms

200 of Them Put in Volunteer Work Here on Saturday, Their Holiday

TREES ARE 12 FEET

Work Starts at Viaduct, Toward City—West to Septic Tank by Tonight

Working on their own time—Saturday being a holiday—the CCC boys from Camp Alton swarmed out on highway 67 early Saturday morning and began planting Hope's Centennial line of American elm trees, starting from the Missouri Pacific viaduct and working west toward the city.

The trees—200 of them—arrived at midnight Friday, and Mayor Albert Graves had to get up at that late hour and see that they were safely stored in city-owned Fair park.

Superintendent R. C. Ellen of Camp Alton and his volunteer camp recruits 100 strong, all working as individual citizens and not as CCC enrolees, took over the job early Saturday morning.

Reach City at Noon

By noon they had planted trees from the viaduct to Floral Hill Farms, on the east corporation line; and they were to complete the planting job Saturday afternoon, carrying the line of trees on both sides of the trunk highway from the west side of the city out to the septic tank.

As a small means of rewarding the CCC boys, a theater party will be given the entire Alton camp Monday night by Manager Arthur Swanke of the Saenger theater, and The Star. This was announced to the boys at noon. The picture is "Wife vs. Secretary."

The American elm trees are beauties, 12 feet high. They are being put down in holes two feet square, and rich dirt is hauled to place around their roots.

100-Foot Intervals

The trees are being planted at intervals of 100 feet, on both sides of the road, on the right-of-way, 30 feet off the edge of the pavement. The trees on opposite sides are staggered so that a passing motorist will find them only 50 feet apart; and when the elms are grown they will virtually bridge over the highway.

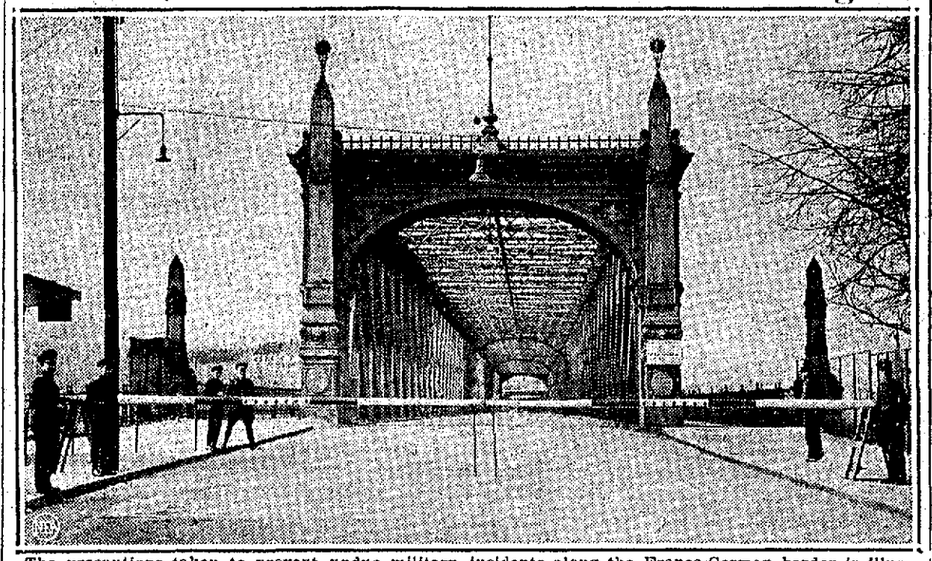

Launched at a city-wide meeting called by Roy Anderson, president of the Rotary club, the Centennial elm planting originated with The Star two years ago, based on a beautiful tree-planting project at Waverly, Tenn.

Following the mass meeting, Mrs. Arthur Swanke and the American Legion Auxiliary agreed to supervise the highway beautification program.

A committee of three men, Fred Gray, J. K. Sale and Sid Bundy, are undertaking to raise the required funds from 14 civic organizations.

The Star and the City of Hope started off the proposed $300 fund by pledges of $50 each, leaving $200 balance to be raised.

Soldiers, Soldiers All Around—But Not One in Sight

The precautions taken to prevent undue military incidents along the Franco-German border is illustrated by this picture of the bridge linking Kehl, Germany, with Strasbourg, France. Only German customs police are in sight at the Kehl end of the bridge, although thousands of troops are billeted in the city. The flimsy barricade thrown across the bridge bars the way to France.

$10 Netted Here by Benefit Show

Proceeds of Ouachita Minstrel Show Go to Tree Campaign

The Ouachita college musical and minstrel show presented Friday night at Hope city hall attracted approximately 300 persons, but netted the Young Business Men's association, sponsors, about $10.

The show, played on a 70-30 basis, netted the Ouachita group about $35 after expenses were paid.

The net proceeds of the Young Business Men's association will go to the tree-planting program on Highway 67 east and west of Hope.

Clothes Closets Valuable to Home

Demonstration Agent Outlines Model Arrangement for Closets

Most Hempstead county farm families need at least two coat closets, one for storing the coats and hats worn to town, to school or to the neighbors, and the other for the farm work clothes, Miss Helen Griffin, Home demonstration agent suggests.

The first closet may well be near the front door where it can be reached conveniently the first thing coming in and the last thing going out. Such a closet is a big help in teaching children orderly ways and in keeping the rooms orderly, Mrs. Ida A. Fenton, extension economist in household management, University of Arkansas College of Agriculture, points out. If the shelf for the hats has a front that drops, they would be better protected from dust.

The second close, for work clothes, which are likely to be soiled, should be near the back or side entrance most used by the men as they come and go to work. It should be well ventilated. Quite commonly the overalls, rough coats and sweaters, and heavy boots and shoes are hung on the back porch where changes must be made. This is neither comfortable nor sightly. An indoor closet, possibly fitted up as a washroom, is much more satisfactory. For boots and shoes there may be racks to keep them off the floor, or a ventilated chest.

Where there are several children it may be possible to give them a closet entirely to themselves, with low hooks and a rod for garment hangers set where they can reach it. Children also need shelves for caps, gloves, and over-shoes, and a drawer or bin for such outdoor play equipment as skates, baseballs, and bats. These may be stored in work clothes closet.

Italy's 300-Mile Advance Is Told

Motorized Columns Did Quickly What Camel Trains Did Slowly

By MARK BARRON
Associated Press Correspondent

WITH THE ITALIAN SOUTHERN ARMY at Neghelli, Ethiopia—(AP)—The Italian "hell on wheels" motorized column which audaciously drove 300 miles straight through the heart of the Ethiopian army on the Dolo front, is a high speed, modern version of the sort of desert warfare in which General Rodolfo Graziani has been participating for almost 30 years.

"Lawrence of Arabia or Kitchener of the Sudan would have liked that push which took Neghelli," a veteran colonel of African wars said. "How they would have marveled at that 28-miles-long column of trucks filled with Italian soldiers captured in eight days a region that would have taken two months in the days when only camel corps were used."

When General Graziani entered Neghelli he headed a column of 1,600 trucks, the slower moving camel corps serving as guards on the flanks and rear.

Victory On Anniversary

Five years earlier on the very same day, January 30, 1931, he led his victorious troops into Cufra which brought under full Italian control Tripoli and Cirenaica, now united as Libya. At Cufra General Graziani only had two trucks, his trops being mounted almost entirely on camels.

The Italian commander on the southern front, according to officers who have fought many years under him, is a military leader who doesn't cling to the old traditions of warfare when he can find more up-to-date methods. He follows two main principles in his brand of desert warfare—the use of "flying columns" and the capture and isolation of all sources of water supply.

Planes' Role Important

He is an enthusiast for mobility and for high spirits among his soldiers. He likes to keep them on fighting edge.

"I prefer moving my soldiers in trucks," he told me. "They advance faster and they arrive fresh for fighting, not worn out as they would be if they had to march."

Co-operating with the "flying columns" making surprise raids on the enemy in jungle and derest, is an intense activity on the part of the avia-

Contestees Insist Stephens Should Disqualify Self

Petition Attacked on Grounds Not All 10 Signers Are Qualified

127 VOTES AT ISSUE

Contestants Attack Validity of Returns 12 Precincts

A hearing on the suit contesting the result of the local option liquor election in Hempstead county February 18, in which the county balloted for retention of the Thorn law by a majority of nine votes, will be held before County Judge H. M. Stephens at the courthouse in Washington Monday morning.

The suit, originally brought in the name of N. P. O'Neal and 11 other Hempstead county citizens, alleges fraud, corrupt, illegal and unfair practices in 12 of the 36 precincts.

Since the filing of the suit, two of the original signatories have withdrawn. They are, A. Albritton and Arch Moore.

The remaining signatories are: N. P. O'Neal, Dorsey McRae, L. M. Boswell, Guy E. Bayse, T. A. Middlebrooks, W. H. Onstead, E. E. Austin, R. M. Bruner, Hollis A. Purtle and E. P. O'Neal, the minimum of 10 required by low to contest an election.

Counsel for the contestants will be Attorney John P. Vesey, who said Saturday he would be assisted by other attorneys.

The contestees, who have denied the allegations contained in the petition of the contestants, will be represented by Attorneys Steve Carrigan and Luke Monroe.

Move to Disqualify

The contestees filed their answer in county court March 11, asking County Judge Stephens to disqualify himself to hear the contest "for the reason that he is a strong partisan of the contestants."

The contestees also asked the petition to be dismissed because it "is not signed by as many as 10 citizens and legal voters;" and because among the signers there are five election officials, who, "if there was any fraud committed or illegal voting permitted in the voting precincts in which the foregoing election officials officiated, they were parties to said fraud and illegal voting, and therefore have no right, under the law, to sponsor a contest of their own illegal acts and conduct."

The contest petition attacks the validity of 127 votes, which caused a wave of protest over the county when the names were made public. Many of the allegations were emphatically denied through the press.

Precincts Attacked

The precincts attacked are:

Sardis, Battlefield, Shover Springs, Patmos, McNab, Deanyville, Hope Ward Four, Ozan, Fulton, Hope Country Box 5, Hope Ward One and Hope Ward Two.

Deducting the 127 alleged votes, the contestants say the count would stand: 887 against sale by package liquor stores, and 769 for retension of the Thorn law.

The official canvass showed: 896 for sale, and 887 against, a nine-vote margin in favor of the package store law.

U. of A. Is Dixie's Bid for Olympics

University Basketeers Beat Kentucky—Will Play in New York

LITTLE ROCK—Again turning on the heat when that became necessary to win, the University of Arkansas basketball teams knocked off its doughty rival, the Western Kantucky Teachers College Hilltoppers of Bowling Green, 39 to 30, in the North Little Rock High School gymnasium Friday night.

Arkansas thus earned the right to represent the South in the Olympic basketball finals in New York April 2-4.

North Little Rock turned out en masse to greet its native son, Coach Glen Rose, and his Razorbacks. It was estimated that 2,000 wildly cheering spectators saw the great battle, as the Southwesern Conference champions again proved heir class. The floor had an overflow crowd and the balcony was jammed.

A Weakness For Boys In Uniform

The Truth About Diet

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

We often have wondered about the first human being who ate an oyster or an egg. It must have required a good deal of courage.

Yet eggs probably are among the earliest of foods. Today they are among the most important. In 1934, it is estimated, we used something more than 31 billion eggs in the United States, of a total value of $433,000,000.

Eggs provide protein, mineral salts, water, vitamins A and D, and a small amount of carbohydrate. An average egg weighs 2 ounces. Of this 15 per cent is protein, 10 per cent fat, 1 per cent minerals, and most of the remainder water.

One egg provides 70 calories. An egg, therefore, is not a good reducing food. It is not filling and it provides a good many calories in a small amount.

You should remember that an egg kept at proper temperature for three weeks will produce a chicken which at once begins to walk and eat. Obviously, therefore, there is a lot of power in an egg.

Egg is easily digestible. Its fat is as easily digested as milk fat, which is somewhat easier to consume than fat of meats.

There are all sorts of superstitions about the digestibility of eggs. Some say that a soft-boiled egg is easier to digest than a hard-boiled egg and vice versa. Actually the amount of boiling does not seem greatly to influence the digestibility. Much depends on the extent to which the hard-boiled egg is chewed at the time of eating.

Apparently a hard-boiled egg is easier to digest than one that is medium-boiled, because in the hard-boiled egg the yolk is brought into a condition which the juices of the stomach will act upon it better than under other conditions.

An egg contains about half as much iron as there is in one-third of a cup of steamed spinach. An egg yolk contains twice as much iron as does an ounce of lean beef or a half cup of string beans.

A freshly laid egg cools and the egg substances contract, air space is left at the blunt end. As the egg grows older, this space increases. That is one way to tell the age of an egg.

An egg laid in winter usually is lighter in color than one laid in summer. However, much depends on the diet of the hen. Nowadays, poultry feeds are developed scientifically, perhaps even more so than foods for human beings.

What the hen eats determines the amount of vitamin and the quality of the other materials in the eggs. Eggs, therefore, are more nearly like milk in nutritive value than any other food.

Because of the ease of eating and digesting soft-boiled eggs, they are among the first of the foods to be given to an infant after it is taken off a milk diet.

If a baby finds it impossible to take milk, an egg with small amounts of fruits and vegetables helps to make a satisfactory substitute. Mothers should remember, however, that the yolk of the egg is the most significant part in the feeding of the child.

Today's Health Question

Q.—Has diet anything to do with neuritis?

A.—Certain forms of neuritis are believed to be associated with deficiency of vitamin B in the diet. Other forms are associated with the taking of poisonous substances, like lead and alcohol, and still others with infections of the body. Only a complete medical examination will reveal the nature of the neuritis and indicate proper steps to be taken in treatment.

A Book a Day

By Bruce Catton

Rebecca West's new novel, "The Thinking Reed," has fallen into the spring literary pool with such a stupendous splash that it would take a rash man indeed to look at it and say, "Phooey."

Yet there is something exceedingly depressing about this book. That, probably, is simply because Miss West has done so superlatively well what she set out to do, viz: dissect the moneyed leisure class which perched atop European civilization during those dizzy years between 1918 and 1929.

Reading it, you feel that you are reading a study in futility; and that feeling is apt to become so complete that what happens to any of the people in the book cases to be of any importance.

It is a bit hard to become engrossed in the troubles of the ultra-wealthy when those troubles are created by the very fact that the people are ultra-wealthy.

Anyway, Miss West tells about an American widow—rich, cultured, etc.—who goes drifting across France trying wistfully to achieve a satisfactory existence. She takes a lover, who is so repellent an article that you begin to doubt her sanity, tries to marry a landed proprietor from Vigrinia, fails and finally weds a French automobile magnate.

The society into which he takes her is enough to make one look forward with eager yearning to whatever kind of social catastrophe may be on the way. It is stupid, lustful, pointless, idle, and greedy.

Miss West puts it under the microscope with passionless precision: the only trouble is that your impatience with the book's members is apt to slop over and include the book's high-souled heroine as well. Patient Griselda is hardly pitiable on $200,000 a year.

Published by Viking. "The Thinking Reed" sells for $2.50.

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

The first time I ever had a golf club in my hand it felt like a plow, which indeed it turned out to be. I was told very nonchalantly to "drive" over a ravine full of trees to the opposite hill. I thought my companions were fooling, but they weren't. Actually it was an easy shot from the tee, no harder than to lift the ball from the fairway to the green with a little wrist stroke.

It was my first mental hazard. It remained so always. By association of ideas and that first Waterloo, I never lost my fear of the game. If someone had said, "We usually try to get over the ditch, but don't you try it. Just give the ball a little bat if you can and se if you can touch it." Then I would not have shivered, hammered the ball down in the mud or ruined my chances as a golfer. Mental hazard spoils more golf than mine.

Playmates Implant Terror

The child starts to school. Nowadays educators realize the danger of the hazard and let him go at is easily and scientifically, which sounds terrible but which is quite simple. New methods of teaching take all these things into consideration. But hazard can still exist—and does; and of all places, right in the home.

Even before he starts other children may say to him as my experienced friends did, "You have to take a pencil and write long, hard words." Or something to that effect.

Parents themselves can add to mental terrors. Innocently, of course, without knowing what they are doing. Sometimes it is by comparing the slow one to the smarter brother or sister. Perfection is always discouraging. The experienced audience never encouraged an amateur yet. Who can play to a gallery of his superiors? Not anyone I ever met or hope to meet.

When a child is working at something new in his lessons and fails at first to grasp the point, his teacher may anticipate it. She knows that a fair proportion of her pupils will have difficulty for a while, and allows for it. The child is working with his peers. He neds encouragement, not discouragement. Yet an older brother or sister, or parents themselves, may look at his paper and comment on poor work. The eye of experience always sees too much.

Expecting Too Much of Child

When a child is put ahead into an advanced grade to make his way because he seems capable, sometimes it takes him weeks or months to prove to the others and even to the teacher that he was worthy of the trial.

"Why, that dummy doesn't know anything," sneers the voice of experience, those other oracles of wisdom in the room who have been in fractions long enough to get all the right answers. Johnny has to live down his first terrors, if ever. At any rate he will not do his best work, usually, because he is up against an unfair comparison and knows it.

Praise is better help than criticism in many cases. Most of us do things more capably near the Blarney Stone than at Delphi. If Johnny is really lazy, and soldiers every chance he gets, it would be silly to use the Jock Horner method of "good-boying" him. But when he is trying and needs a real break, why not give him a boost to jack up his pride?

Pigs Lose Squeal

DOUBLIN—(AP)—Ireland can now boast—if it cares to—of its gruntless, squealless pig, guaranteed to remain noisless under any and all conditions.

Smugglers of livestock over the Free State-Ulster border are responsible for these silent pigs—in order that customs officers may not be guided by appealing "oink-oinks" in the darkness.

An operation is performed on the pig, the vocal chords being removed, and the perfect pig for smuggling is produced in a few minutes.

It has been estimated that 17,000,000 people in the United States are hard of hearing in some degree.

Ravages of Prickly pear, which is a curse in Australia, are being fought there by means of beetlelike insects imported from Texas. Several thousand acres already have been cleared of the menace.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

TOBY RYAN, 19, works behind the jewelry counter of a large Manhattan department store. She poses for a photograph to be used in a store advertisement and MARTY HIATT, the photographer, tells her she has a "camera face."

Discharged from the store due to the scheming of jealous MAURINE HALL, Toby has difficulty finding another job. Then she meets Marty Hiatt and he sends her to BEN BLAKE, manager of a model agency. Toby registers at the agency, secures work as a model.

On a bus one afternoon she meets wealthy TIMOTHY JAMIESON who tries to make a date with her. Toby refuses.

Toby and her friend, HARRIET HOLM, take part in a benefit style show. CAROL MARSH, wealthy and snobbish, also models in the show. Toby, parading as a model, sees Jamieson again. He asks her to have dinner with him and impetuously she agrees.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XVI

THEY sat on a bench against the side of the room. Almost all the tables were filled now, except that here and there couples had left their places to dance in the square space reserved for that purpose. The floor show had ended a few minutes before. Now the dance band was playing a gay and rhythmic tune, the hit number of a new musical show.

Tim Jamieson touched Toby's arm. "Bored?" he asked.

"Oh—no!"

"I thought you must be; you've been quiet for so long."

"Have I?" Toby smiled. "I'd forgotten. I think I'd forgotten everything — this room and the people—"

"And did you forget me, too?"

"Well—in a way. I was thinking how happy I am. Wishing everything could go on and on, just as it is now—the music and soft lights and everybody having a grand time. Oh, I have had a grand time tonight, a wonderful time! I don't know when—"

"Well, that's better!" Tim paused, eying her. Then he smiled. "You're a funny little thing, Toby Ryan. Did you know that?"

"Why?"

She had never looked lovelier. Her eyes, brightly questioning, seemed enormous. Her head was lifted, bringing into outline the adorable line of her throat. She put one hand to her cheek, tucking a stray curl into place and he noticed how graceful the movement was.

"Never mind," Tim said. "You're exactly the way I like you. And I'll tell you something else. I saw you this afternoon—no, I don't mean those few moments when we talked together. It was after I came away and went back. I was early; you see, I didn't waut to take a chance of missing you. The fashion show was still going on and I stood at the door a moment. I saw you come in in a dress that was sort of rose colored—like pink sea foam. It was an evening dress."

Toby nodded. "It was lovely, wasn't it?"

"Lovely? It was gorgeous—or rather, you were gorgeous, wearing it. That's what you are and that's what I'm going to call you, Gorgeous. It's exactly the right name for you. Do you mind?"

She laughed. "I don't see why I should."

"Neither do I, Gorgeous."

THEY both laughed then, for no reason at all. Toby said, "I like your name Tim. It seems to suit you. It sounds care-free and good-natured and—"

"Lazy?"

"Well, I wouldn't say that. At least, I wasn't going to. Is it true?"

"Some people think so." He frowned. "But why should I pretend to like sitting around in an office when I don't? I've tried and I hate it. Looking at charts and tables and pretending to know what they mean. Going to conferences and hearing some old duffer spout off a lot of facts and figures that nobody gives a darn about or even listens to. It's tripe, that's what it is. Besides, if I did have a job, it would only mean taking it away from some poor devil who needs it. Why should I do that?"

Toby thought of Carol Marsh and nodded. "I see what you mean," she said, "and I think I agree with you."

"The way things are," Tim went on, "the business is a lot better off than if I were trying to put my oar in. Sometime, of course, maybe I'll feel differently about it. Meanwhile, I've got other things to do—"

"What, for instance?"

"Oh, lots of things. Fooling around with boats in the summer. Playing golf and a little polo—I'm terrible at it, but still I like to keep at it. Staying in town in the winter, getting around and seeing people and keeping track of what's going on—"

"It sounds like a pleasant life," Toby told him.

"It's all right. Tell me, Gorgeous, do you like being a model?"

"I like it a lot better than working at Bergman's."

He considered this. "Yes, I guess you would. But how about going around to studios and style shows and the places you do. Don't you meet a lot of fresh guys?"

The dimple showed in her cheek. "Only one, so far. There's a Mr. Timothy Jamieson, who's been something of a nuisance."

He grinned. "And what are you going to do about it?"

"I haven't quite decided yet."

"Well," he said, "if I can be of assistance in any way—"

"Thank you. I'll remember that."

THE music that had ended a short time before was beginning again. This time the band played a number with a slower tempo. Toby had heard the words, sung by a radio favorite. They were rather sentimental and it was a dreamy, sentimental tune.

She said suddenly, "Let's dance."

He had asked her earlier and she had refused, afraid to reveal that she was not a practiced dancer. But her caution proved unnecessary. In Tim's arms she moved lightly, smoothly.

The dancing space was small and crowded. Another couple, rather awkward, swung toward them and he held her closer. Toby felt his cheek against her hair. It was only for an instant; the awkward couple moved on and Tim released her.

He said, "Why didn't you tell me you can dance like this?"

She laughed, not bothering to reply. She had never known that dancing could be such sheer delight, but then, she had never had such a partner.

She was sorry, when, at last, the music ended and they went back to their table. Several new-comers were entering, the women in evening wraps and the men in tail coats. Toby saw that nearby tables had been deserted. Suddenly she realized it must be growing late.

"What time is it?" she asked.

Tim consulted his wrist watch. "Not late yet. A little after 1."

"Oh, but that is late! Remember, I have to work tomorrow."

"One more dance," he bargained. "Then we'll go."

Toby wanted that dance, too. She said, "Well, just one more—"

The one dance stretched into several. It was nearly an hour later when Tim helped her into a cab and dropped into the seat beside her. He was still protesting, "But it's not really late yet! Look—lots of people are just coming—"

"It's too late for me," Toby told him. "I've got a 9 o'clock appointment in the morning."

He was interested. "What are you going to do at 9 o'clock?"

"Stand before a camera," she told him, "with my best smile and show how easy it is to do the family washing since my husband bought me a Whatsis washing machine."

"Is that supposed to be work?"

"If you'd try it once, you'd think so. They'll probably want to shoot the picture a dozen different ways. They always do."

"How long will it take?"

"All morning, I hope. We're paid by the hour, you know."

"Will you have lunch with me?"

TOBY hesitated. She wanted to say that she would, but caution raised a warning voice. "I'm sorry," she said, "I'm afraid I can't. You see, I don't know how long I'll be working or whether the office will have something else for me in the afternoon."

"Then how about dinner?"

Once more the cautioning voice rose, but this time Toby ignored it. "I don't know," she said. "But you can call me."

The entrance to Mrs. Moeller's rooming house looked dingier and shabbier than it had ever looked as Toby and Tim Jamieson stepped out of the cab. He followed her up the half dozen steps, took both her hands in his.

"I'll call you tomorrow, Gorgeous," he promised. "And I'll be thinking about you—"

She thrilled to the words. She said—her own voice not as steady as she wished it had been—"I'll be thinking about you, too."

For a minute she thought he was going to kiss her. She was glad when, instead, he stepped back. Still holding her hands, he said, "Good night, Gorgeous."

Toby went inside then. The night lamp was burning, casting a dim, faintly yellow glow over the hall. There was not a sound to be heard in the whole house.

Very quietly Toby went up the two flights of stairs, switched on the light in her own room and closed the door.

Then, for a few moments she stood there, leaning against the door, holding both hands to her cheeks. Tim had held her hands. It was as though she could still feel his touch on them; as though she were transferring that touch to her cheeks. Oh, she was glad he hadn't tried to kiss her or take her in his arms. She didn't want cheap caresses. She wanted every memory of the time they spent together to be fine and beautiful.

She could still see him, looking down at her as he had during that last dance. Only a brief moment. Living that moment again, Toby's heart raced.

Key to Heaven

I dream of roses we shall find
One day by some fair garden wall.
A dream of paths that some day must
Fulfill the quest, the wanderlust
That slumbers in us all.
A rose that grows without a thorn
We dream to find—tomorrow morn!
Then Memory like a restless ghost
Goes back to roses climbing through
A trellis by a garden door
Which we may enter never more.
Where velvet lay the dew.
Ah, yes, the perfect rose," we say,
"I grew in that garden—yesterday!"
And so I wonder when, perhaps,
Some one, sometime, will stop to greet
The wondrous beauty of the rose
Which in complete perfection grows
This moment at his feet!
Heaven is his who every hour
Will find and pluck a perfect flower.

tion corps. Fierce bombing of the larger Ethiopian bases precede a main offensive like the ones up the Dawa Parma and Ganale Doria rivers, but when the "hell on wheels" outfit gets under way then the scouting planes go into action.

General Graziani emphasizes that the importance of mobility in African warfare includes not only effective movement of troops, but also the effective movement of supplies and extension of communications. Hence aviation's important role is for early offensive and, later, for scouting information.

General Likes Barbed Wire

Thre times during the push on Neghelli, scouting planes signalled the section of the motor column to which I was attached of the approach of enemy squadrons attempting surprise atacks from the cover of the thick bush through which the Italians were advancing. Each time the warning from the air allowed the troops to launch unexpected counter-attacks to drive back the Ethiopians.

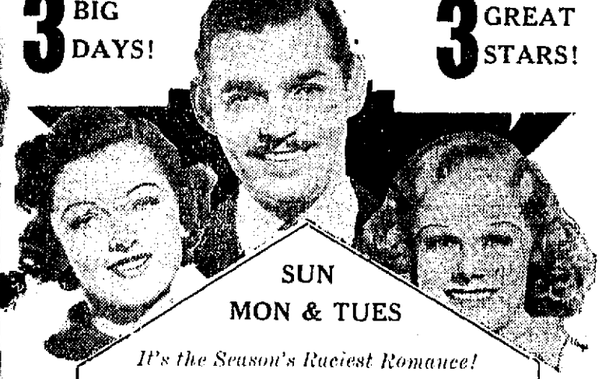

General Graziani also is a believer in the efficacy of barber wire. Famous in military annals is the 225 miles of barbed wire, electric charged fence which he strung along the border between Egypt and Libya and which proved the trap against which he drove the rebellious tribes of the Cufra desert into submission.

Today the Dolo and Ogaden fronts are intricate webs of barbed defenses, augmented by walls of thorn bush which are even more impenetrable than the wire.

Lose U. S. Title by One Point

WICHITA, Kan.—(AP)—The Tulsa Senos defied tradition and, by defeating the El Dorado (Ark.) Lions, 23 to 22, Friday night became the first sextet in tournament history to win three consecutive Women's National A. A. U. basketball championships.

The tournament result was a victory for officials who seeded the entries. The Stenos and Lions were seeded first and second.

The Stenos played an almost mechanical perfect game the first half, and built up a 14-to-5 lead. The taller white-clad Lions came back in the third period to play the Tulsans off their feet. They took a 19-18 year on Williams' free throw and Thurman's field goal early in the final period.

From that point the teams battled on practically even terms. With a half minute to play the Tulsans held a 23-to-21 lead. Hazel Walker netted a free throw to bring the El Dorado score to 22, but the Tulsans controlled the ball the final few hectic seconds.

Some Unlawful Shoveling Is Suspected on Pennsylvania Farm

COMMERCE, Pa.—(AP)—Mrs. D. C. Short says two men, armed with diving rods, pick and shovel, invaded her farm, did a bit of digging and walked away with a "pot of gold" for which people here have searched for years.

Neighbors say there's a freshly dug hole on the Short farm and the bottom is a round, smooth depression that could have been made by a pot.

Oldest residents say the "pot of gold" is supposed to have been buried before the Civil war on the Short farm, then owned by the Sanders family.

Mrs. Short has appealed to federal agents in Atlanta to aid in bringing the alleged finders to justice.

Decision on Milk

to the state on gross sales.

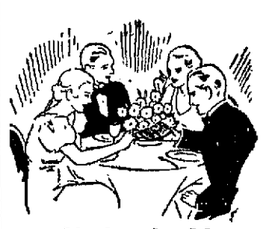

"The cours have determined that the terms milk and butter fat are entirely different," said a brief filed by Assistant Attorney General Thomas Fitzhugh and Millard Alford, revenue department attorney, "that butter fat is an element and product of milk just as gasoline is an element and product derived from crude oil.

"A tax on gasoline would not be a tax on crude oil, nor would an exemption pertaining to gasoline be an exemption on crude oil. For the same reason an exemption pertaining to butter fats would not apply to whole milk.

"If the legislature had intended to exempt milk, it could have said so."

It's 'on the Beak' for Pigeon Racers

Feathered Gentlemen Fly From Dallas to Kansas City Quickly

By ZACHARY TAYLOR
Associated Press Correspondent

KANSAS CITY.—(AP)—Here's a derby in which the owner may have an entry in every race; he gets more speed and mileage on his oats and he has no jockey and trainer to board.

Fifty Kansas City busines men enjoy the racing of homing pigeons. They have more than 1,000 streamlined birds trained for the airlines—same breed that won fame in wartime as dispatch carriers.

There's no pomp and ceremony at the start of these keenly contested flights. Owners crate and ship 400 birds or more to an express agent 50 to 1,000 miles away.

That express agent may be the only witness of the getaway, moving about in the dawn's early light, lifting open the doors of the crates. He telegraphs the time of release to the race secretary here.

Travel 40 to 50 M.P.H.

It's then that the derby man can retire close by the home roost and chew his finger-nails, scanning the sky.

Stout-winged veterans clip off the 500 miles between Dallas, Texas, and Kansas City at 40 to 50 miles per hour, depending upon the wind, says A. R. Whelan, a dentist and one of the leading fanciers.

Racing custom provides that each bird flies against three competitors in "pools" which range from 25 cents to $26 on each bird. Sometimes a bonnie blue plummets onto his favorite landing post with as much as $103 on his beak—in addition to purse money, Whelan explains.

A special clock is used to time the finish. In flight each bird wears a stamped rubber leg-band. When it arrives at home base, the band is removed with all speed and deposited in the clock, which records the time and locks the band inside. The racing secretary, who supervises the synchronization of racing clocks, holds the master key. He removes the bands to determine the time winners on the basis of elapsed time.

"It's surprising how few birds are lost in flight," says Whelan. "Hawks get a few, but some get lost or are just quitters that join flocks of common pigeons. I have known homers to come in after a year's absence."

Traffic in homers is brisk. The hobbyists are continually trading and breeding new stock. Sturdiness is the principal objective. Good birds sell from $50 to $75. The highest known price for a single bird was $1,080, in an English transaction.

Best When Hungry

Homers are raced with an appetite. Whelan says they do better when taken off full feed, given a light laxative and sent on their way. They are inclined to drop for water when racing on a "full crop."

Training begins 12 weeks after hatching. It isn't hunger or nostalgia that brings the canny little squabs back home, Whelan says it's just the nature of the birds. They take 2-and 3-mile hops to the home trap-nest at first, then jumps up to 100 miles. Yearlings are ready for the 500-mile flight from Dallas and perhaps the 1,000-mile trip from Brownsville, Tex. They're at their best between the ages of three to five.

Nearly all the fanciers have "prisoner" birds for breeding purposes, birds purchased away from their instinctive homes. "They might stick around a year to raise and educate their young," says Whelan. "Then, some day, zingo, and they're back in their original homes."

Two pigeon derby clubs are located in Kansas City. The average loft contains about 200 homers and most owners have other varieties of fancy pigeons.

"None of us eats squab much," says Whelan.

Hardtack, or "iron rations," for the British army now consists of an eight-ounce cake made of cocoa, cocoa-butter, milk, proteins, and sugar. The cake is sufficient to keep a man alive for 48 hours.

Gable, Harlow and Loy at Saenger

"Wife Versus Secretary" on Screen Sunday Through Tuesday

Faith Baldwin's ultra-modern metropolitan conflict of a millionaire husband caught between the loves of two women—his wife whom he adores and his secretary whom he professes recommended by this reviewer to all those in search for the best entertainment of 1936.

Above everything else, however, "Wife Versus Secretary," showing Sunday, Monday and Tuesday at the Saenger, has the great starring combination of Clark Gable, Jean Harlow and Myrna Loy heading the admirable cast so ably directed by Clarence Brown.

"Wife Versus Secretary" is a modern story of Van Sanford (Clark Gable), prosperous young magazine publisher; his wife Linda (Myrna Loy), and his lovely and capable secretary, Miss Wilson (Jean Harlow).

Gable in the polished big-business role of Van—a decided contrast to his recent vigorous role in "Mutiny on the Bounty"—establishes his right as one of three international leaders of the starring ranks.

Jean Harlow again appears minus her platinum tresses, and as the secretary reveals new talents in versatility. Miss Loy, the screen's ideal wife, proves that she can be just as faithful to Gable as she was in the role of William Powell's wife many times past.

The tax rate for Egyptians at one time was determined by the rise of the Nile river. A great rise meant bountiful crops, and this enabled the people to pay more taxes.

The hobo of the fish world is the shark-sucker, a lazy idler without the ambition to move under its own power. It fastens itself to some larger fish, preferably a shark, and rides about the sea living on the remains of its host's meals.

STORIES IN STAMPS

By I. S. Klein

MARTYR TO POLITICAL SPOILS

ASSASSINATION by a disappointed office-seeker brought an abrupt end to the promising career of President James Abram Garfield, just three months after he had entered office, in 1881. With his martyrdom came the end of the political "spoils system" introduced by President Jackson in 1829, and the beginning of civil service.

Garfield came of poor parents, and drove mules along the canal towpaths of Ohio when a boy. By hard work he prepared for college, being graduated with high honors in 1856. He taught, studied law, and fought on the Union side in the early part of the Civil War. In 1863, he was elected a representative in Congress, and in 1880 he became senator. The same year he was elected to the presidency.

Garfield's portrait appears on five U. S. stamps, including the current 6-cent value. The issue of 1902 indicates the date of his birth (1831) and of his death (1881). A similar stamp was reissued in 1922, to commemorate the 91st anniversary of Garfield's birth.
